Samuel Westbrook and Mary Westbrook, 18 June 1786. (Anthony Westbrook had a brother Samuel who married Maria Van Aken.)

F. Douglas Peville's History of the County of Brant, 1920, Vol. 1, page 253: The circumstances under which the Westbrook's came to Brant County possessed all the elements of romance. On, or about the close of the Revolutionary War two brothers, John and Alexander Westbrook, whose parents resided in New York State, were in the fields, or woods, looking after their horses. Some of the Six Nations Indians who were engaged on a marauding expedition in the State named, took them prisoners, and they were brought to the territory now known as Brant County. They were kept by the red men for two or three years and well treated, but were ultimately taken to the Niagara frontier and turned over to the Americans in an exchange of prisoners. They at once returned home where they were received as if from the dead, all hope regarding them having long since been abandoned. However, they had been so impressed with the surroundings of their enforced habitation that about the year 1782, or 1783 they persuaded their father (Anthony) to come here and settle. After many days of travel they finally reached the new home, locating on Fairchilds Creek. John served with distinction in the war of 1812, and became a Major. He was on terms of great intimacy with Brant. Strong and stalwart of frame he was the stuff out of which pioneers were made, and he considered it no great hardship to ride, as he often did, with his grist, on horseback to the mill at Niagara. He married Elizabeth Gage whose mother was of notable type. Mary Jones before her marriage, she was at the time of her coming to Canada the widow of a loyalist officer, John Gage, who had been killed during the fighting. Even at this early day she had relatives in Canada and her brother, Augustus Jones, was a well known land surveyor who had taken a bride from among the Six Nations. Their son Peter was afterwards the well known missionary chief. The young widow resolved to come to the Dominion with her two children, James born in 1774 and Elizabeth, born in 1776. Placing them and a few belongings in a canoe she made her way along the old time water route to Canada; travelling up the Mohawk, past Fort Stanwix, across the short portage to Wood Creek, down Oneida Lake and the Oswego River and thence along the Southern shore of Lake Ontario to Niagara and the head of the lake at Stoney Creek. She settled in Saltfleet Township and cleared the land and tilled the soil until her son James was old enough to shoulder the responsibilities of the farm. This heroic woman died about 1839 in Hamilton at the home of her son, when she was nearly one hundred years old. The marriage of her daughter to Major Westbrook took place in 1796. They had a family of sixteen children, their numerous descendants constituting many prominent and well known families in the city and county. Alexander moved to what is now Brantford, in 1817. He resided on the hill near Lorne Bridge, in a log hut overlooking the river and for some time carried the mail on foot, and by horseback, between Ancaster and Waterford. He finally settled in Oakland. Haggai, another brother, also lived in Oakland. Another son of Anthony Westbrook was Andrew, who became quite celebrated for his exploits during the war of 1812. He deserted to the United States forces and in 1815 was attainted of High Treason for "aiding and assisting the Enemy, making Prisoners of His Majesty's leige subjects and compelling them to take an Oath Neutrality." By this attainder he forfeited approximately 4000 acres of land situated in what is now Western Ontario. Andrew Westbrook is said to have been the subject of a novel by Major John Richardson, the Canadian author, entitled "Westbrook; or the Outlaw" which was published in New York.

Eighteenth Report of the Department of Public Records and Archives of Ontario, 1929, page 38, Land Book A. 29th June, 1793. ... John Westbrook ... Anthony Westbrook: Memorial that having made the settlements on which they live adjoining the west line of Township No. 8, near the road lately laid out from the head of Lake Ontario to the River La Tranche, that they were encouraged by the Land Board and Acting Surveyor to settle upon those lands four years before they were surveyed, which proves now to be reserved lands, your petitioners pray that the same may be confirmed to them. Ordered that they be confirmed in the possession of their lands and that the Surveyor be directed to make reserves for the Crown in some other part of the township.

Letter Feb. 22, 1937, Niagara Historical Society, Niagara-on-the-Lake: In our #39 a list supplied by Lieut. Col. A. S. De Peyster to Gen. Haldiman, July 21, 1784, of those on this side of the river receiving rations but lands not yet drawn for, Anthony Westbrook is among those of Brant's Volunteers.

The first part of the paper is devoted to a general discussion of the problem of the origin of life. It is shown that the problem is one of the most important and interesting in the history of science. The author then proceeds to a detailed examination of the various theories which have been proposed to explain the origin of life. He shows that the most plausible of these theories is that which attributes the origin of life to the action of natural forces. This theory is supported by a number of facts which are presented in the paper. The author then discusses the question of the evolution of life, and shows that the most plausible theory of evolution is that which attributes the evolution of life to the action of natural forces. This theory is supported by a number of facts which are presented in the paper. The author then discusses the question of the future of life, and shows that the most plausible theory of the future of life is that which attributes the future of life to the action of natural forces. This theory is supported by a number of facts which are presented in the paper. The author concludes the paper by stating that the most plausible theory of the origin, evolution, and future of life is that which attributes the origin, evolution, and future of life to the action of natural forces. This theory is supported by a number of facts which are presented in the paper.

Mary M. Langs Wins Art Honors. Her Sculpture Earns High Commendation From French Critics. Mary Metcalf Langs, Niagara Falls, N. Y., daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. William Henry Metcalf, Burford, Ontario, has earned recognition as a sculptor both in France and the United States. For several years she has exhibited in Paris at the spring and autumn salons, in New York at the National Academy of Design; in Philadelphia at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts and in the Western New York Exhibition at Buffalo. Her name is to be found in "Who's Who in American Art." Recently, an article on Mrs. Langs work, with photographs appeared in "La Revue Moderne," a French art magazine, the translation of which reads as follows: A pupil of Bourdelle and Gimond, Mrs. Mary Metcalf Langs has gone far with her technique, which is essentially massive and at the same time sober. Her entry in the section of Sculpture at the Exposition of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, comprised the portrait of a violinist, Mrs. Lester M. White, a simple bronze but stamped with a profound knowledge of the relative value of planes and a sureness of workmanship, which is proved also by the numerous participations of the artist on other occasions. We have seen her in the Salon de Paris since 1928, where she exhibited a bust of Conseiller Chapsal of which our colleague of "Le Temps" (Thibault Sissons) remarked the fervent realism. Then we find her again in the Salon d'Automne since 1934. She here reveals herself faithful to a particularly living plastic art, evoking marvellously the impression of movement. These qualities are characteristic of the garden figure reproduced which is of a sobriety certainly worthy of Bourdelle and designed to an admirable profile from any angle on a green background. In regard to a torso, which figures equally in one of the expositions mentioned, we should say that it expresses fully an ensemble of reflections based

1. The first part of the paper is devoted to a general discussion of the problem of the origin of life. It is shown that the problem is one of the most important and interesting in the history of science. The author discusses the various theories of the origin of life, and shows that the most probable one is the theory of spontaneous generation. This theory states that life originated from non-living matter, and that it has since developed into the various forms of life that we see today.

2. The second part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the evidence for the theory of spontaneous generation. The author discusses the various experiments that have been conducted to test this theory, and shows that the results of these experiments are in favor of the theory. He also discusses the various observations that have been made of the origin of life, and shows that these observations are also in favor of the theory.

3. The third part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the implications of the theory of spontaneous generation. The author shows that the theory has important implications for our understanding of the history of life on Earth. It shows that life is not a rare phenomenon, but rather a common one that has arisen many times over the history of the Earth. This has important implications for our understanding of the evolution of life, and for our understanding of the future of life on Earth.

4. The fourth part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the philosophical implications of the theory of spontaneous generation. The author shows that the theory has important implications for our understanding of the nature of life and the universe. It shows that life is not a divine creation, but rather a natural phenomenon that has arisen from non-living matter. This has important implications for our understanding of the nature of the universe, and for our understanding of our place in it.

5. The fifth part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the practical implications of the theory of spontaneous generation. The author shows that the theory has important implications for our understanding of the origin of diseases and the development of new drugs. It shows that the theory can be used to help us understand the origin of various diseases, and to develop new drugs to treat them. This has important implications for our understanding of the nature of disease, and for our understanding of the future of medicine.

on a penetrating observation which denotes experience and a broad eclectic artistic practice. The examination of this work shows also a constant care to avoid too great abstraction but to mingle the abstract and the material intimately and to inscribe this is an ideal frame of a composition architectural, as well as decorative.

1. The first part of the paper is devoted to a general introduction of the subject, and to a statement of the objects of the investigation. It is shown that the problem is of great importance, and that it has not been completely solved. The author then states the plan of the paper, and gives a list of the symbols used.

2. In the second part, the author considers the case of a single particle, and shows that the motion is periodic. He then considers the case of a system of particles, and shows that the motion is also periodic. He then considers the case of a continuous medium, and shows that the motion is also periodic.

3. In the third part, the author considers the case of a single particle, and shows that the motion is periodic. He then considers the case of a system of particles, and shows that the motion is also periodic. He then considers the case of a continuous medium, and shows that the motion is also periodic.

4. In the fourth part, the author considers the case of a single particle, and shows that the motion is periodic. He then considers the case of a system of particles, and shows that the motion is also periodic. He then considers the case of a continuous medium, and shows that the motion is also periodic.

5. In the fifth part, the author considers the case of a single particle, and shows that the motion is periodic. He then considers the case of a system of particles, and shows that the motion is also periodic. He then considers the case of a continuous medium, and shows that the motion is also periodic.

6. In the sixth part, the author considers the case of a single particle, and shows that the motion is periodic. He then considers the case of a system of particles, and shows that the motion is also periodic. He then considers the case of a continuous medium, and shows that the motion is also periodic.

7. In the seventh part, the author considers the case of a single particle, and shows that the motion is periodic. He then considers the case of a system of particles, and shows that the motion is also periodic. He then considers the case of a continuous medium, and shows that the motion is also periodic.

8. In the eighth part, the author considers the case of a single particle, and shows that the motion is periodic. He then considers the case of a system of particles, and shows that the motion is also periodic. He then considers the case of a continuous medium, and shows that the motion is also periodic.

9. In the ninth part, the author considers the case of a single particle, and shows that the motion is periodic. He then considers the case of a system of particles, and shows that the motion is also periodic. He then considers the case of a continuous medium, and shows that the motion is also periodic.

10. In the tenth part, the author considers the case of a single particle, and shows that the motion is periodic. He then considers the case of a system of particles, and shows that the motion is also periodic. He then considers the case of a continuous medium, and shows that the motion is also periodic.

3. Eva May Metcalf, born May 29, 1885, married Dec. 18, 1907 G. Frank Butler, resided Calgary, Alberta. Daughter:

1. The first part of the paper is devoted to a general discussion of the problem of the origin of life. It is shown that the problem is one of the most important and interesting in the history of science. The author discusses the various theories of the origin of life, and shows that the most probable one is the theory of spontaneous generation. This theory states that life originated from non-living matter, and that it has since developed into the various forms of life that we see today. The author also discusses the evidence in support of this theory, and shows that it is the most consistent with the facts of the case.

2. The second part of the paper is devoted to a detailed discussion of the theory of spontaneous generation. The author shows that this theory is based on the fact that life is a complex of many different parts, and that these parts are all derived from a common ancestor. This ancestor is the simple organic matter that is found in the earth, and from which life has since developed. The author also shows that the theory of spontaneous generation is supported by the facts of the case, and that it is the most probable one.

3. The third part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the evidence in support of the theory of spontaneous generation. The author shows that this evidence is of two kinds: direct and indirect. Direct evidence is that which is obtained from the study of the origin of life itself, and indirect evidence is that which is obtained from the study of the development of life. The author shows that both kinds of evidence support the theory of spontaneous generation, and that it is the most probable one.

4. The fourth part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the various forms of life that have originated from non-living matter. The author shows that these forms of life are all derived from a common ancestor, and that they have since developed into the various forms of life that we see today. The author also shows that the theory of spontaneous generation is supported by the facts of the case, and that it is the most probable one.

5. The fifth part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the future of the theory of spontaneous generation. The author shows that this theory is still a subject of much controversy, and that it is one of the most important and interesting in the history of science. The author also shows that the theory of spontaneous generation is supported by the facts of the case, and that it is the most probable one.

The National Cyclopaedia of American Biography, Vol. 14, 1910, page 472. Frank Fairchild, Wesbrook, physician, educator, pathologist, bacteriologist and hygienist, was born in Brant county, Ont., July 12, 1868, son of Henry Shaver, and Helen Marr (Fairchild) Wesbrook. He was educated at the public schools of London, Ont., and Winnipeg, Man., and was graduated in arts at the University of Manitoba in 1887, receiving the degrees of M. A., M. D., and C. M. in 1900. He worked in the McGill University Medical School in Montreal (1889); the University of Cambridge, in England (1892-95); King's College and St. Bartholomew's Hospitals, London, Rotunda Hospital, Dublin, and the Hygienisches und Pathologisches Institut, Marburg, Germany. Dr. Wesbrook was house surgeon of the Winnipeg Hospital in 1890 and later in the same year a railway surgeon at Banff, N. W. T. He was appointed professor of pathology at The University of Manitoba in 1892, at which time he was also appointed John Lucas Walker student in pathology in the University of Cambridge, England. He resigned the latter appointment in 1895 and was made professor of pathology and bacteriology. He has been director of laboratories of the College of Medicine and Surgery at the University of Minnesota since 1896; and dean of the college since 1906. He was a member of the Minnesota State Board of Health during 1896-1900, and is a member of the advisory board of the Hygienic Laboratory of the U. S. Public Health and Marine Hospital Service, the Association of American Physicians, the Association of American Pathologists and Bacteriologists, London Pathological Society, Pathological Society of Great Britain and Ireland, Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, Member of the British Association for Advancement of Science, National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, American Medical Association, Society of American Bacteriologists, and the American Physiological Society. In 1902 he was chairman of the laboratory section of the American Public Health Association and in 1905 became president of the association. He was president of the section on state and municipal hygiene, at the International Congress of Hygiene and Demography in 1910. He is a member of state and local medical, scientific and other societies. His research work and publications have dealt with bacterial toxins (anthrax, cholera, etc.), effect of sunlight on bacteria, fever, wandering cells in inflammation, immunity, public health, bacteriological diagnosis in diphtheria, typhoid fever, rabies, infectious diseases of animals, embalming fluids, and water supply. Dr. Wesbrook has been a contributor to American and foreign scientific and medical journals, bulletins, and official reports. He is a member of the Minneapolis, Town and Country, Skylight and Commercial Clubs. He was married April 8, 1896, to Annie, daughter of Sir Thomas W. Taylor, late chief justice of Manitoba, and has one child, Helen Fairchild Wesbrook.

Proceedings and Transactions of The Royal Society of Canada, May, 1919. Page (X): Frank Fairchild Wesbrook (Portrait). The subject of this sketch was the son of H. S. Wesbrook, a well-known citizen of Winnipeg, and of his wife, Helen Marr Fairchild. He was born in 1868, and graduated from the University of Manitoba in 1887. Three years afterwards he took the degree of M. D., C. M. Following a summer course at McGill University he continued his studies at St. Bartholomew's and King's College Hospitals in London. It was his intention to return to Winnipeg and settle in practice, but in the summer of 1891, he crossed to Dublin to undertake the noted maternity course at the Rotunda Hospital and this changed the whole direction of his life. There he came into contact with E. A. Hawkin, a Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, the most brilliant British bacteriologist of his day. Under his leading young Wesbrook had opened up to him the fascinations of research and the possibility of elucidating the problems of disease. As a result he went to Cambridge and remained there for several years, at first working in the Pathological Laboratory. It may be remarked that he was the first Canadian medical student to enter for graduate work in Cambridge, and his welcome there was cordial, as well for his personality as for the pioneer character of his studentship. His friendliness, his frankness, his open appreciation of his surroundings, and his genial, exuberant vitality, attracted everyone. For his important research work in the laboratory he was granted a British Medical Association Exhibition, followed in 1894 by the John Lewis Walker Studentship in Pathology of the University, a valuable studentship with more than a thousand dollars a year for three years. With this assistance he spent some months at the Institute of Hygiene and of Pathology in the University of Marburg, studying more particularly the epidemiology of cholera. The chief published outcome of his work there was a study upon destructive effects of direct sunlight upon growths of the cholera and other micro-organisms. The reputation which he gained from this sound work and training led to his being called in 1895 to the chair of Pathology and Bacteriology in the State University of Minnesota. With his accustomed energy he threw himself heartily into the work of the Medical Institute, becoming Dean of the Faculty in 1906 and retaining the post until he left the University. He planned and arranged the admirable laboratory and he widened the influence of the University as a servant of the State. As a member of the State Board of Health he was enabled to co-ordinate the efforts of the Government with the scientific equipment of the University, and developed a plan of laboratory diagnosis and supervision of infectious disease which has become the model for other States and indeed for other countries. His valuable services in the realm of public health were recognized by the United States Government, which appointed him a member of the Advisory Board of the Hygienic Laboratory and Public Health Service, by the American Public Health Association which elected him President in 1905, and by his nomination as President of the section upon state and municipal Hygiene at the International Congress of Hygiene and Demography held at Washington in 1912. Notwithstanding the influential position which was his in the United States, the call in 1913 to be President of the new University of British Columbia was too attractive to be resisted. He saw the opportunity to direct the establishment of a noble institution along noble lines. Then he accepted, everything was full of promise, but almost immediately the financial and labour crisis smote the province and following upon this came the Great War. His strong inclinations were to offer himself for service, where as an expert in epidemic disease and sanitation he could have been of great value. He longed intensely to take his part at the front, but he realized full well that his first duty was with the young university and that by remaining at his post he could give effective assistance by training university men. But the strain told upon him; it manifested itself during the last year by increasing blood pressure and evidences of arteriosclerosis, that bane of those who overdrive their brains. The end came on October 20th, 1918. There was nothing formal or academic in his personality. He was sane in mind as he was strong in body, as loyal to his principles as to his friends, and there was no more loyal friend. He was one whom men accepted as a leader, because being whole-hearted he inspired trust, such trust as intellectual brilliance alone can never command. The following resolution passed by the Board of Governors of the University of British Columbia at their first meeting after his death is evidence that he carried into his new position the qualities that had everywhere made him eminent in friendship and science. "During the too short period of his Presidency, much was accomplished, and though the ideal on which his heart was set is still far from achievement and progress has been delayed by war and other causes, he always met impediments with resolute courage and disappointments with manly fortitude. This Board found him ever resourceful, never sparing of his own strength, or time, or comfort, always passionately devoted to the purpose of making this University one of the great schools of the British Empire and a source of strength and progress to this Province. The members of this Board wish to express their feeling of personal bereavement in the loss of a friend and comrade as well as a leader. The genial nature, complete unselfishness, simple sincerity and kindly human sympathy of the late President were revealed in all his personal and official relations."

Dictionary of Canadian Biography, Toronto, 1934, page 537. Frank Fairchild Wesbrook, (1868-1918) pathologist, bacteriologist and educationalist, was born in the township of Oakland, Brant county, Ontario, 12 July, 1868. He belonged to a United Empire Loyalist family. His father was H. S. Wesbrook, commission merchant, and subsequently mayor of Winnipeg, and his mother, Helen Marr Fairchild. He received his early education in the public schools of London, Ontario, and Winnipeg, and matriculated in the University of Manitoba, from which he was graduated B. A. in 1887. He did post graduate work in arts in the same institution, at the same time beginning his medical course. He also attended the McGill College medical school in Montreal for a time. In 1890 he received his M. A., M. D., C. M., from the University of Manitoba. During the same year he served as interne in the Winnipeg General Hospital, and as railway surgeon at Banff. Specializing in pathology and bacteriology, he went in 1892 to Cambridge University for further research in his chosen field. He was the first Canadian student to enter for graduate work in medicine at Cambridge and his welcome was cordial, not only on that account, but because of his own personality as well. He was appointed John Lucas Walker Student at Cambridge, conjointly with Dr. J. Lorraine Smith. This appointment was for a term of three years, and carried with it a scholarship of £300 per annum, this being divided between the two appointees. While abroad he gained further experience in King's College at St. Bartholomew's Hospitals in London, the Rotunda Hospital in Dublin, and the Hygienisches and Pathologisches Institut in Marburg, Germany. In April 1896, not many months after his return to Canada, he married Annie, daughter of Sir Thomas W. Taylor late chief justice of Manitoba. His first teaching appointment was to the chair of pathology in the University of Manitoba, in 1895, the year of his return from Cambridge. He remained only a short time, however, resigning almost immediately to accept the professorship of pathology and bacteriology in the University of Minnesota. His connection with the latter institution was to last for seventeen years. The quality of his work, and his conspicuous ability as an organizer soon won him recognition, and promotion came rapidly. In 1906 he was appointed dean of the college of medicine and surgery. His scientific attainments, and his valuable services in the field of public health were widely recognized beyond the walls of the University. He was appointed by the United States Government member of the advisory board of the Hygienic Laboratory for the Public Health and Marine Hospital Service; he was elected president of the American Public Health Association in 1905, and at the meeting of the International Congress of Hygiene and Dermography held in Washington in 1912, was made president of the section upon State and Municipal Hygiene. He was a member of the Minnesota State Board of Health from 1896 to 1900, and director of its laboratories. He belonged to the Association of American Physicians, the Association of American Pathologists and Bacteriologists, the London Pathological Society, the Pathological Society of Great Britain and Ireland, the American Medical Association, the Society of American Bacteriologists, the American Physiological Society, and was an honorary member of the Massachusetts Association of Boards of Health, and of state, city, county, and local boards. He also became a member of the Canadian Public Health Association, the International Anti-tuberculosis Association, and was a fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and of the Royal Sanitary Institute. In 1918 he was made a fellow of the Royal Society of Canada. He contributed articles to various medical and scientific journals, and to the biennial reports of the Minnesota State Board of Health. On 27 January, 1913, Wesbrook was offered the presidency of the new University of British Columbia, an offer which he decided after some consideration, to accept. The project of establishing a provincial university in British Columbia was one of some years' standing, having been suggested as early as 1877. The legislature had passed a University Endowment Act in 1907, and in 1911 had authorized the granting of a site for the proposed institution. It now appeared that these long-cherished plans were approaching fruition. Provision had been made, it was thought, for adequate endowment resources and future expansion. Naturally the announcement of a new university to be launched under such favourable auspices aroused wide-spread interest; the government was anxious to secure a strong president and a number of prominent educators from Great Britain, Canada, and the United States were suggested for the post. In announcing the final appointment in the legislature, 17 February, 1913, the Hon. Dr. Young, Minister of Education, said: 'That we wanted first of all was a Canadian, young enough to take charge vigorously; a man imbued with western ideas and inspired with western optimism; a thoroughly capable man for the largest job outside that of the premier of British Columbia, and I say to-night that we are getting that man. He is a man in the prime of life. He is a Canadian, Dr. Wesbrook is his name and he is at present dean of the medical school of the University of Minnesota.' Wesbrook had been very popular in Minneapolis, and his resignation was received with regret, both in the university and the city at large. After concluding his work, and welcoming a conference of the American Medical Association to Minneapolis, he proceeded to Vancouver to assume his new duties. On the occasion of his appointment, he was awarded the degree of L.L.D. by the

Universities of Toronto and Manitoba, and two years later received the same honour from the University of Alberta. It was well that the new president was endowed with plentiful optimism and enthusiasm, for the record of his tenure is largely a story of hopes deferred that would have been disheartening indeed to a man of less buoyant temperament—a story of delays and disappointments from causes that could hardly have been foreseen—financial depression, the War, and his own failing health. It had been hoped that the new university would open its doors in 1913, but for various reasons it was found impossible to hold the first session until 1915. At that time the legislature voted sufficient funds to enable the new institution to take over the work of the McGill University College of Vancouver, which had hitherto provided higher education for the province. Wesbrook spent several months in the winter of 1913-1914 travelling in Eastern Canada, the United States and Great Britain in order to procure a staff. He was anxious to engage men with a cosmopolitan outlook, and for that reason gave preference to professors who had had experience in more than one country. With characteristic energy and thoroughness, he visited some two hundred English-speaking universities, and secured a number of able men, who, with the nucleus of the McGill University College staff, formed a strong faculty. The site chosen was a magnificent one on the shores of the Gulf of Georgia, a few miles from Vancouver, but most of it was still virgin forest. The work of clearing, which had been started in 1912, was continued in 1914, and the steel framework of the new Science building erected. Then came the Great War, and the governors, feeling that it would be unpatriotic to commit the province to heavy expenditures at that time, discontinued all work on the new site. As a consequence, the president and faculty for years carried on university work in temporary quarters, handicapped by lack of room and insufficient funds. Wesbrook himself was never to see the promised land, for his death occurred before the university was enabled to move to its permanent site. At the outbreak of the War, realizing that his expert knowledge of epidemic disease and sanitation would be of great value at the front, Wesbrook was extremely anxious to volunteer for military service. He qualified for a commission immediately, and Surgeon-General Jones in London recommended his appointment to be director general of the Medical Service. At the end of the first university session, believing that the new institution was now firmly enough established to spare him for a time, he applied to his board for leave to enlist. The governors, however, feeling that his services were essential to the university, were unwilling to release him, and although bitterly disappointed, he acquiesced. He worked loyally for the cause at home in every way possible, helping to organize the patriotic fund campaign, serving as chairman of the provincial commission on food resources, and encouraging his staff to assist by means of research and public lectures. A number of the faculty and students served overseas, and throughout the War the president found time, in spite of the pressure of his work, to write individually to those who were on active service—not perfunctory notes, but long letters full of matters of personal interest. Wesbrook was a fluent speaker with a fine platform presence, and the power of stirring his audience with his own earnestness and infectious enthusiasm. He was in constant demand to address meeting for all manner of organizations, and in his eagerness to create public sympathy for the University, he responded generously, without regard for his own time and strength. Even after his health had begun to fail, he often accepted invitations to address public gatherings when he was too tired even to talk with his friends while driving to the place of meeting. Among his more notable addresses was that on 'The Physician of Tomorrow,' delivered before the American Association for the Advancement of Science in San Diego, August, 1916. He was chosen by the people of Vancouver as chief orator on the annual Day of Remembrance 4 August, 1918. Although he was a man of vigorous physique, and had been an athlete in his youth, the strain and anxiety of the war years told upon him, and in the end his health broke down completely. Early in the spring of 1918 he was obliged to be absent several weeks on account of illness, but spent much of the following summer attending the conference of Canadian Universities, and interviewing candidates for appointment to the staff. Shortly after his return he was forced to relinquish his work, and recommended the appointment of an acting president. He died 20 October, 1918. He is buried in Vancouver. His wife, now living in Vancouver, and a daughter, Mrs. Helen Fairchild Robertson, of London, England, survive him. Wesbrook is described as a man of charming personality, gracious and urbane, with a wonderful gift of friendship, and a tact and human sympathy which enabled him to meet all sorts and conditions of men without constraint. He was very human, with a keen sense of humor, a most entertaining raconteur. His colleagues regarded him with equal affection and admiration. He was energetic and whole-souled in his devotion to his task, and his buoyant temperament met difficulties with unfailing courage and resourcefulness. He was himself enthusiastic, and had a leader's power of evoking enthusiasm. Though a specialist by training, he had a broad cultural outlook and a genuine interest in the humanities. He was sometimes accused of failing to stress sufficiently in speeches the cultural side of university training, in his insistence upon its utilitarian value, but if that was the case, it was because he considered the cultural function of education so obvious as to need no emphasis. He had a wide knowledge of educational systems, had given much thought to the problems of the constitution, scope and management of provincial universities, and came to British Columbia with well-defined ideas on the subject. His educational creed may be found in two addresses which he gave at his own alma mater. On 25 October, 1907, in the second annual opening address delivered at the University of Manitoba, he had discussed 'State Responsibility in University Education,' and 19 November, 1913 on the occasion of the inauguration of the president of the University of Manitoba—and a few months after his own appointment—he had further developed the same theme in an address upon 'The Provincial University in Canadian Development.' He felt that the provision of university training was a natural and logical, as well as an inevitable function of the state. Indeed, had the state been developed to its proper point, men like Burbank, Edison, and Marconi would have carried on their researches under the auspices of a state university, and 'in this way the state, that is, all the citizens, and not individuals or corporations would derive more directly the benefits which accrue from the advance of knowledge.' The curriculum should be built upon a foundation of the humanities and the basic sciences, with later specialization along the lines indicated by local conditions and needs. There should be no divorce of literature, science, and the arts from the crafts, industries and professions. The people's university should meet the needs of all the people. In Canada particularly, he felt, the university needs to provide 'a nation-building mechanism' to hasten the fusion of the various stocks that make up our population, and the development of a common culture, and an international viewpoint, as Canada's contribution to the Empire. 'Having done our best,' he said, 'to found provincial universities without provincialism, let us pray that posterity may say of us that we builded even better than we knew.'

1. The first part of the paper is devoted to a general discussion of the problem of the origin of life. It is shown that the problem is one of the most important and interesting in the history of science. The author discusses the various theories of the origin of life, and shows that the most probable one is the theory of spontaneous generation. This theory is based on the fact that life is everywhere, and that it is impossible to find a place where it does not exist. The author also discusses the question of the origin of the first living organisms, and shows that the most probable one is the theory of the origin of life from non-living matter. This theory is based on the fact that the elements of life are everywhere, and that it is impossible to find a place where they do not exist. The author also discusses the question of the origin of the first living organisms, and shows that the most probable one is the theory of the origin of life from non-living matter. This theory is based on the fact that the elements of life are everywhere, and that it is impossible to find a place where they do not exist.

2. The second part of the paper is devoted to a detailed discussion of the theory of spontaneous generation. It is shown that this theory is based on the fact that life is everywhere, and that it is impossible to find a place where it does not exist. The author discusses the various experiments that have been conducted to test this theory, and shows that the results of these experiments are in favor of the theory of spontaneous generation. The author also discusses the question of the origin of the first living organisms, and shows that the most probable one is the theory of the origin of life from non-living matter. This theory is based on the fact that the elements of life are everywhere, and that it is impossible to find a place where they do not exist.
